Heart Throb Of the Silent Screen

He was born Rodolfo Alfonso Raffaello Pierre Filibert Guglielmi di Valentina D'Antonguolla, but his devoted fans knew him as Rudolph Valentino, and he was one of Hollywood's earliest stars of the silent era. Valentino was the prototypical tall, dark, and handsome Italian—a perfect on-screen hunk. After dancing a tango in The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse, he became a national sensation. His sudden death on August 23rd, 1967, threw his legions of fans into hysteria. Some even attempted suicide. Tens of thousands visited his open casket in New York City, where mourners rioted and broke a plate-glass window at the funeral home in the hopes of getting in for a final glimpse of the star. A reported 100,000 mourners lined up outside the church where services were held. By train, Valentino's body made its last trip to Hollywood for a final silent goodbye.

Lefties Take the Lead

Did you hear the one about the inventor who developed a left-handed hammer? It didn't sell. He forgot to invent left-handed nails! But if he had, they likely would have been sold by the Left Handers Club, which celebrates International Left Handers Day on August 13. On average, 10% of people are left-handed writers. This rate reportedly varies by country; roughly 13% of Canadians and just 2.5% of Mexicans are left-handed. Left Handers Day is about more than just advocating for left-handed products. It's about creating "Lefty Zones," where right-handed people attempt tasks using their left hands. For one day, the proverbial shoe will be on the other foot. It's a day when all lefties will fight for their, um... rights.
