From Kitty Hawk to the Stars

November is a wonderful time to celebrate aviation! National STEM/STEAM Day (November 8), Veterans Day (November 11), and National Aviation History Month all recognize the science, innovation, and people who helped shape the history of flight.

On December 17, 1903, Orville and Wilbur Wright made history with the first successful powered airplane flight in Kitty Hawk, North Carolina. Lasting just 12 seconds and traveling 120 feet, this remarkable achievement changed the world forever.

Aviation continued to advance through both World Wars, with military pilots and crews playing vital roles. Today, airplanes connect people across the globe, while aviation innovations continue to inspire space exploration.

From the Wright brothers' first flight to modern aircraft, aviation history reminds us that determination, creativity, and a little courage can make the impossible possible!

Lights, Camera, Casablanca

One of the most famous movies of all time, Casablanca premiered in New York City on November 26, 1942. The World War II drama boasted many Hollywood stars, including Humphrey Bogart and Ingrid Bergman. It was nominated for eight Academy Awards and won three, including Best Picture. But Casablanca was more than an award-winning movie. In November 1942, Allied forces staged "Operation Torch," an invasion of Northern Africa that captured Casablanca, the very same setting as the film. Many consider Casablanca a propaganda film, with Bogart's character, Rick, symbolizing American freedom, liberty, and equality.

Pixar's Big Break

On November 22, 1995, Pixar made movie history with the release of Toy Story, the first feature-length film created entirely with computer-generated imagery (CGI). Before this groundbreaking achievement, animated movies were traditionally created by artists drawing thousands of frames by hand. With a team of just 27 computer animators, Pixar brought Woody, Buzz Lightyear, and their friends to life, forever changing the world of animation.

Pixar's story began years earlier, in 1986, when Steve Jobs purchased a small computer graphics company from Star Wars creator George Lucas. That same year, animator John Lasseter created Luxo Jr., a two-minute animated short featuring a playful, hopping desk lamp. The film earned an Academy Award nomination and introduced the little lamp that would eventually become Pixar's famous mascot.

Following the success of Toy Story, Pixar continued to push the boundaries of animation. Monsters, Inc. (2001) introduced incredibly realistic digital fur, while Finding Nemo (2003) amazed audiences with lifelike underwater scenes. Beloved films such as Cars, Ratatouille, Up, Inside Out, and Coco continued combining remarkable technology with heartwarming storytelling.

Today, Pixar remains one of the most influential animation studios in the world. Its creativity and technological advances have transformed movies, television, and video games, proving that with imagination, innovation, and a little determination, anything is possible!
